

Middle Temple Library: Prime Minister Portraits

Introduction

Charles Michael Philips was admitted to the Inn in 1975 and called in 1978. Over several generations his family had collected a collection of Prime Minister portraits, starting with Sir Robert Walpole. In 1975 Philips approached the Treasurer, Sir George Baker about donating his collection to the Inn.

After several letters to both Master Treasurer and the Under Treasurer, Captain Morison, the Executive and Finance Committees decided to accept Mr Philips' generous offer. It was decided that the portraits should hang in the Library and they arrived late in 1976.

The portraits languished in the Library loft for at least the next 20 years before it was decided to conserve and hang them. When they were eventually displayed, there were a number of portraits missing including the Earl of Shelburne, Lord Grenville, George Canning, and several twentieth century PMs.

Ever since, it has been the Librarian's (previously Keeper of the Library) task to request a signed portrait of each new Prime Minister who takes office. It was not until 2012 that a member of the Library and Archive Committee, Lord Hacking, highlighted the missing portraits. The Library and Archive Committee and the then Keeper of the Library, Vanessa Hayward, set about to complete the collection. One glaring omission was the Duke of Wellington –which was generously donated by Master David Wurtzel.
